

What can Rail Operational Development do for you?

By working with you we can

- Help you design cost effective, safety validated, risk mitigated procedures to develop and sustain your business.
- Produce necessary risk assessments that ensures operational safety is never compromised,
- Develop and train managers to be a valuable member of the team

Operations Standards for Heavy & Light Railways

Through our experience of taking companies from nationalisation to privatisation, we can design and produce risk based operational procedures in accordance with national and EU legislation.

We have proven (internationally recognised) ability to thoroughly review existing policies and procedures to ensure that they fully address operational safety requirements in the most cost effective and safest way, and also take into account the nature of your operation and the size of your supervisory and management workforce.

Station Working and Procedures including Risk Assessments

Having worked with many of the UK's largest rail operators we are able to produce safe and effective station working arrangements, which are not only risk based, but also take into account the nature of the stations train service plan and the methods of dispatch for the different types of trains.

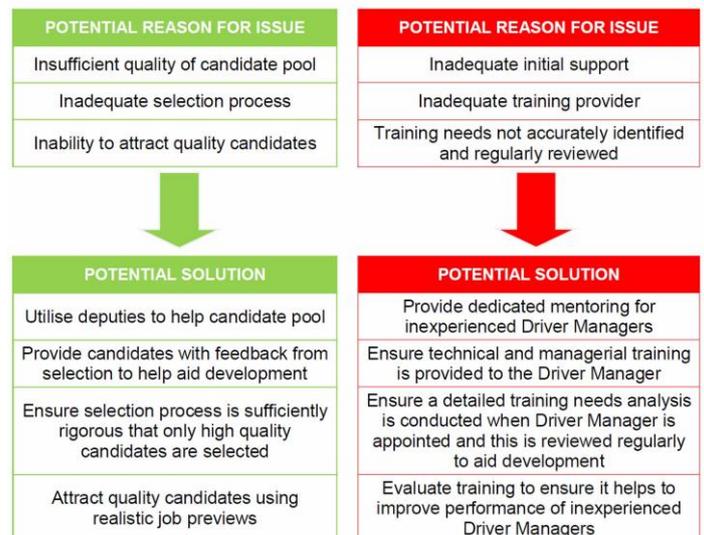

Development of operational line Managers' carrying out their day to day tasks

Since UK privatisation and the significant advances made towards an integrated European railway, there has never been a more important time to train operational managers in their role and responsibilities.

RODL can undertake pre-selection assessments of potential candidates to ensure the most suitable is selected. We can then train them in the following areas:

- Background to the integrated European railway network and its benefits
 - Background to company procedures and their link to European and national procedures
 - How to undertake accident and incident investigation
 - How to manage employees to get the best from them
 - How to negotiate and consult with trade unions at all levels
 - How to undertake discipline and grievance hearings
- RODL believes this approach produces a more effective Operator that not only improves the individual, but also greatly enhances your business
